The 15 Hottest Artists of the Summer

A look at the season's most pleasantly ubiquitous artists

Gina Beavers
Mondrian, 2012

Brooklyn-based painter Gina Beavers makes meaty paintings that sometimes have a pleasantly creepy volume to them—in paintings of bodies that she has in her debut solo outing at James Fuentes, muscles and breasts bulge out at the viewer. She also has work in the Scott Hug-curated blowout at Andrew Edlin in Chelsea. Earlier this summer she curated a show at Gallery Diet in Miami under the auspices of Joshua Abelow's Art Blog Art Blog curatorial outfit, and presented work in "Can't Stop Rock Lobster" at Martos's Shoot the Lobster project space.
